There is no question that the Legislature was fairly elected. There is no question of its constitutional right and duty to try contested elections and decide them in accordance with the facts. There is no way of avoiding political chaos except by the recognition of a tribunal to settle such disputed questions. Yet the Grant party in North Carolina, dreading an adverse decision, refuses to accept the judgment of the court of last resort, and invokes an appeal to arms, with the ultimate interference of Congress, and, of course, the interposition ducing North Carolina to the condition of istration has been so long accustomed to ruling Southern states with a high hand, and usurping under the plea of revolutionary nec ssity the powers which belong by then refused to pay for it. Fit represent the Constitution to the State governments, that it probably does not appreciate the enormity of this lawless project. What has restore Caldwell after the Legislature has removed him and declared Merrimon legally elected, it can forcibly install Dix in New York-nay, in the matter of that, can revise the votes of the Electoral College, and insist that Grant shall be recognized as President after the electors have given the majority to Greeley. Where is the usurpation to end? We are brought down at once to the brute force of military despotism, where the judge of last resort is the general who

The tendency of the Grant Administration towards this sort of usurpation is unmistakable. In old Bomba's flourishing days a groom was sent to England to purchase valuable horses. While in London his Majesty's groom died. By the old King's permission the horses were given to Byrne, who was Jones, of Laurens, by being thrown from an expert jockey. Byrne went to Naples, and was engaged in his Majesty's stables. Step by step he advanced to the position of master of horses. When the old King was dying he did not forget the horseman. During the brief and unhappy reign of Francis the Second, Byrne retained his old position, and when the new King was driven from Naples his Queen promised Barnes, of this county, has received a thorizing it to commence business under the horseman that he or his family should never want as long as her purse could assist them. Byrne had saved money, and when quiet reigned in Naples he fitted up a commodious and respectable boardinghouse, which has ever since been the favorite resort of tourists in moderate cir-comstances. Young Giovanni Rissi had been for several years a visitor at Byrne's house, ostensibly to procure a knowledge of English, but really to court one of Byrne's daughters. Mr. Byrne had two daughters, Eliza and Martha, who were accomplished and of great beauty. Eliza, the elder, added to her remarkable personal charms an amiability of character sufficient to win the most fastidious. She formed a union with young Rissi, and both lived with the firm determination of becoming one day man and wife. The marriage day was finally settled upon, but Rissi's father objected.-Mr. Byrne was indignant at the elde Rissi's objection, and refused to permit his daughter to hold further communication with the banker's son. From the 6th to the 9th instant, which included the day assigned for their wedding (Aug. 8,) nothing was heard of Miss Byrne or Giovanni Rissi. Rumors of an elopement were inevitable, the general belief being that they had fled to Wemys Bay, near Greenock, Scotland, where Miss Byrne had many friends. About 7 o'clock when the sun had just set over the grand going to the princely grounds of the Villa Reale to hear the music of revel in the luxuries of the daintily-fashioned saloons, the attention of a peliceman was attracted to something which was occasionally rolled by the tide up the convex walling of the public garden on the bay.

Tresses, the folds of a silken dress, and also the garments of a man made the gend'arme hazten to the authorities of the dead-house and announce what he had been. The morgue boat, with its dusty covering, was sent to the spot and the obsects were hoisted on board. A young man and woman bound together with cords around the ankles and necks were revealed to the men in the boat. The girl had been beautiful. The pearly teeth, chiselled features, and splendid auburn tresses put the corpse-mongers out of their routine of cold carelessness for once. The portly form of the well-known and universally admired Giovanni Rissi was then discovered.

The music in the garden was hushed, and the news of the discovery sped through every circle within the Villa Reale-nobles, untitled aristocracy, and plebeians. The point of the public garden, opposite gloomy Vesuvius, where the corpses were found was thronged with spectators, and the boat was followed on its way up the bay to the dead-house. A phial of prussic acid was found on Rissi, and it was proved that he and the girl died from the effects of poison.
